

- The report provides group level data on preferred behaviors based on leadership best practices.
- The best practices are context specific so the preferred behaviors will change depending on the needs of the situation
- The group data will help leaders understand which best practices come most and least naturally to the group.
- The Group Data is presented in graphs void of individual information.
- Discussion questions can help group members have a dialogue about the implications of the group's tendencies.
- Summary pages provide information on the group's greatest strengths and challenges, as well as concrete steps toward sustainable success action.

Group Culture Report